The book is based on the authors own experience of the education systems in India and Germany, where a close connection between the theoretical learning and the practical world exists, whereas this relation is very poor in India and education is often reduced to learning by heart merely for a successful examination. Since the 18th century wise Indians realized the necessity of European education as a remedy for the defects in Indian schooling systems. The European education system aims to create responsible-minded citizens through mass education. The English education however was introduced in India in the 19th century exclusively for administrative purposes and to create the...
